The Louisville Orchestra invites you to participate in the Louisville Zoo’s eighth annual recycled musical instrument contest!

This unique event allow students to focus on recycled-content products, post-consumer contents and multiuse materials while making music! Using only recycled items, students will make a musical instrument that reflects, interprets, or depicts Reuse, Reduce, and Recycle.

Students submitting musical instruments made from recycled materials are invited to participate in a jam session with the Louisville Orchestra Music Director Teddy Abrams at the awards presentation press conference on March 21st at 11 am.

For questions or more information about the competition, please contact Kyle Shepherd at kyle.shepherd@louisvilleky.gov or (502) 238-5331 and for questions or more information about the Louisville Orchestra’s MakingMUSIC Landfill Orchestra, please contact Blake-Anthony Johnson at bjohnson@louisvilleorchestra.org or visit louisvilleorchestra.org/teachers

ENTRY IDENTIFICATION LABEL
(please print)
Students attending a 2020 MakingMUSIC concert in March (24-26) are asked to create original instruments from found/recycled objects to create a “Landfill Orchestra”. Students are encouraged to take their instruments to the concert to play with the orchestra on a select song.

Additionally, students are invited to participate in the Louisville Zoo Trashformation art contest. Students may create instruments as individuals or as groups, and submit them to the contest. Once the judging process is complete, LO representatives will pick up entries and return them to their respective schools so students may participate in the MakingMUSIC concert.

More information about the contest is below. Please visit the LO website for inspiration and lesson plans for creating your Landfill Orchestra: LouisvilleOrchestra.org/Teachers

If you have questions or need additional information, please contact Blake-Anthony Johnson at bjohnson@louisvilleorchestra.org.

NOTE: Participation in the Landfill Orchestra program and/or the Trashformation contest is optional.
